Improving Fluency & Pronunciation

Timed - Paired - Practice

How are you going to teach pronunciation?

- One of the most difficult skills in the learning and teaching of English language (Gilakjani, 2016)
- Teachers focus their limited time in the classroom on other aspects of second language acquisition such as grammar and vocabulary

Neglected and difficult to teach

Teachers have had no training and understandably lack confidence

No clear guidelines and are confronted with contradictory purposes

No well-established systematic way of deciding what to teach and when and how to do it

The number of controlled experimental studies on pronunciation teaching or learning is still remarkably small

How to address production and perception of English sounds?

Poor pronunciation is the main cause of communication breakdowns or misunderstandings in ELF interactions

(Deterding, 2013; Jenkins, 2000; Thir, 2016).

You need to get students conversing...

... independently

Concerns over misunderstandings which might occur due to differing expectations of explicitness (Matsumoto, 1988)

Awareness of the importance to maintain harmonious relationships within the class (Nisbett & Masuda, 2007)

Losing face or making mistakes in front of others (Kawamura, Kudo & Hail, 2006)

Standing out from others through speaking out and showing off their abilities (Brown, 2004)

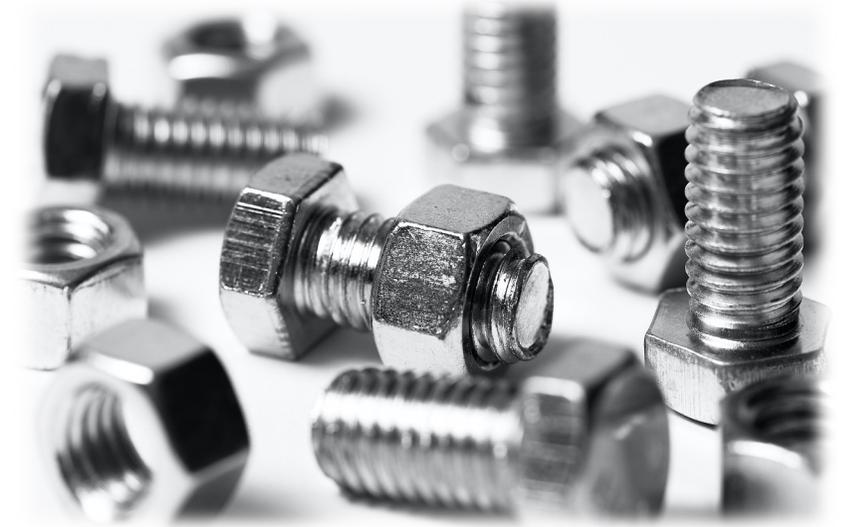

Falling short of other's expectations (Kanagawa, Cross & Markus, 2001).

Lets observe one pair...

- The teacher will stop the conversation if:
 - Pausing
 - Grammatically incorrect
 - Comprehension issue

- More attention placed on observing and producing language leads to better intelligibility and comprehensibility
- Students will be better equipped to converse in this second language and hopefully improve their proficiency
- Improves motivation, listening, speaking and confidence

How to include pronunciation practice in the classroom

For pronunciation training:

- Students may be overwhelmed with other aspects of second language acquisition (Tavakoli et al., 2020)
- Not all learners can equally benefit from it: motivation (Marinova-Todd et al., 2000), exposure (Shively, 2008), attitude (Elliot, 1995), personality (Miller, 2003) and mother tongue (e.g. Avery & Ehrlich, 1992) all affect the effectiveness of the training sessions
- Effectiveness of training sessions will determine each student's conceptualizing of English sounds patterns (Gilakjan, 2011)
- Need to describe the auditory quality of sounds that makes sense for the learner to capitalize on

SUGGESTIONS

Pronunciation considerations

- Introduce at an appropriate level and time so that it does not have a negative impact on fluency, confidence or development on grammar or vocabulary (Pipe & Tsushima, 2021)
- Requires creative ways to integrate pronunciation training activities into speaking-orientated classes in a manner that clearly relates to the oral communication of the course and student needs (Levis & Grant, 2011)
- Integrated pronunciation training is more effective than approaches that focus on either fluency or articulatory goals alone (Morely, 1991)
- Pronunciation should arise from the actual speaking needs and contribute to the success of the interaction (Levis & Grant, 2011)
- Teaching techniques, such as drilling or shadowing, must directly exercise the speech that they will actually use in real life and outside the classroom Gilakjani (2011)
- Successful integration of prosody training will, therefore, depend on the teacher's ability to apply to unplanned as well as planned speaking (Levis, 2001)

Uncomfortable situation

When to focus on the pronunciation?

Fluency

- After first practice rounds and testing so that students can work on fluency
- Then introduce pronunciation target, practice and test

Set homework on the topic before the next class

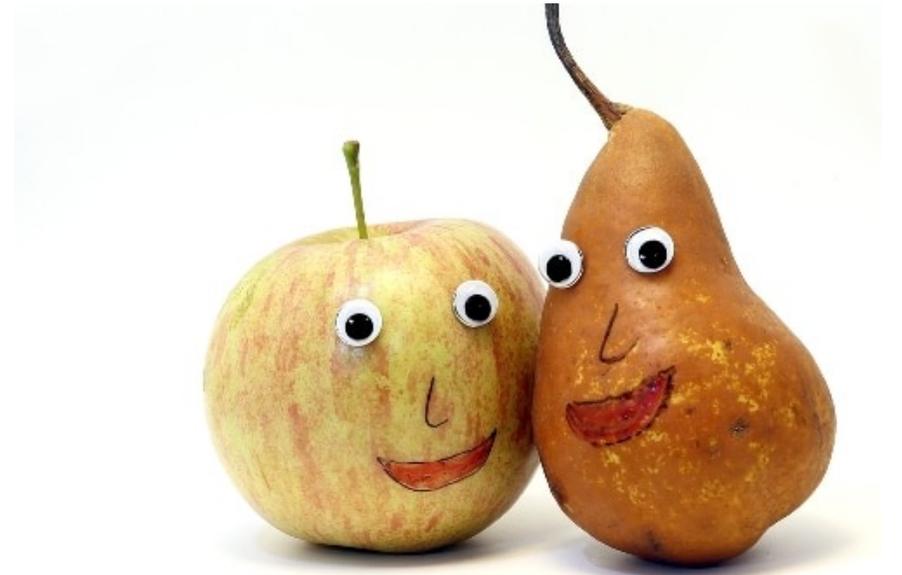

- You have materials to work with rather than summative feedback after completing the topic
- You can then prepare aspects to pronunciation to focus on
